Rex Benson, a 72-year-old Plano man, died in a house fire early Thursday morning when he and another resident reentered their burning home to retrieve cell phones to call 911.

Plano Fire-Rescue arrived at the scene three minutes after receiving a 911 call about a home engulfed in flames in the 800 block of Haggard Street.

Firefighters were told there was a resident inside the home, but were unable to enter the house due to the amount of flames.

The image is a screenshot of a YouTube video player. At the top left, the YouTube logo is visible. To its right is a search bar containing the text "i want my ipad". The main video area shows a close-up of a young child with blonde hair, crying intensely. Below the video, the title "I WANT MY IPAD!!!" is displayed in large, bold, black letters. Underneath the title, the channel name "Daniel Brooks" is shown with a small profile picture and the text "16 videos". To the right of the channel name is a red "Subscribe" button with a white play icon and a grey box containing the number "34". On the far right of the video information section, the view count "67,038" is displayed. Below the view count are icons for likes (63) and dislikes (68). The video player interface includes a progress bar at the bottom of the video frame, showing a play button, a volume icon, the time "0:01 / 1:01", and icons for settings, full screen, and a share icon.

Apple is Always Updating!

The screenshot shows a web browser window with the URL www.theverge.com/2014/2/21/5433938/ios-update-7-0-6-released-with-security-fix. The page features a navigation bar with categories like LONGFORM, VIDEO, REVIEWS, TECH, SCIENCE, CULTURE, DESIGN, BUSINESS, US & WORLD, and FORUMS. The main article is titled "Apple releases iOS 7.0.6 with fix for security issue" by Jacob Kastrenakos, dated February 21, 2014. The article text states: "Apple has released iOS 7.0.6, a minor update to the operating system that resolves a security issue. The issue revolved around SSL verification, though Apple hasn't yet described exactly what was going wrong. Presumably, it was important enough to warrant releasing an update to fix it now rather than bundling it into iOS 7.1, a large update to iOS 7 that Apple has been beta testing for several months now. Many iPhone and iPad owners have been eagerly awaiting the larger update, which is reported to include a number of design improvements and a fix to the pesky bug that's been causing devices to restart seemingly at random during use. That wait may not be much longer though: reports have pegged iOS 7.1's release as sometime in March." An update section notes: "Update: On a new security page, Apple has disclosed the basic details of the flaw fixed in iOS 7.0.6. It seems that in at least one prior version of iOS, a hacker may have been able to retrieve and alter data that should have been protected by encryption. Apple says that this happened because the operating system failed to validate the connection's security. Given the explanation's limited details, it's hard to judge just how serious this vulnerability may have been. But even so, it appears that it could have been a quite damaging, suggesting Apple had good reason to release the update quickly." The page also includes social media sharing options, a "SHARE" button, and a "RELATED" section at the bottom.

Is it prudent to be afraid of an update from Apple?

Apple Right Not to Unlock Dead Mother's iPad

An interesting story hit the web this week. After their mother succumbed to her battle with cancer, son Josh Grant from London, England requested Apple give him the password to her account so he could unlock her passcode-locked iPad. And Apple refused.

And rightly so.

Look, she probably didn't have anything on the iPad that she wouldn't gladly let her sons see. Probably. But the iPad is used for a lot of things these days, including as a personal journal. There's nothing to say she didn't have things stored on the iPad that she'd never want her family to see.

information, we'd be all up in arms about it, right?

In this, the proper route for Apple is to allow the iPad to be restored to factory settings, which according to the Daily Mail, is what Apple did after getting clarification the family just wanted it restored.

Sound cold?

Maybe. But for security sake, Apple needs to be cold. We live in a very public world with social media urging everyone to share the most private details. For those who want to keep those details private, big companies need to respect things like passwords and passcode locks.

In the end, everyone got what they wanted out of this situation. But we shouldn't paint Apple as the big bad company for doing things the right way. After all, if it was the CIA rather than her sons asking for that
