ABILENE, Texas (KTAB/KRBC) - It was 1978 when Bob Kolquist found out his heart was beating a little slower than normal.

It's something he's known since his time in the Airforce, never caused him any trouble but it has forced him to wear a pacemaker.

"My heart rate was 47, that's very slow a lot of people would panic if they are that slow," said Kolquist.

Then comes something he didn't have in 1978, but now he's hoping one day it could be used save his life, it's the familiar health app on your phone.

Opening it, you'll find out that you can actually put in your medical information, easily accessible in an emergency situation.

"They would know what my allergies were, my medical conditions, I have a pacemaker, so that might mean something," said Kolquist. "It makes me feel much better that they could get to my contacts and call them, my wife my children."

I found a USB stick in the street the other day. This is not the first thumb drive I have found, and apparently this is not an unusual event, as some reports indicate that dry cleaners find thousands of them (along with some more unsavory items) each year.

<https://www.tripwire.com/state-of-security/security-awareness/what-to-do-with-that-found-usb-stick/>

Unfortunately, this is a very dangerous method, as USB sticks may contain malware.

In the now famous “Stuxnet” case, infected USB sticks were purposely dropped in a parking lot with the hopes that an employee of the nearby factory would plug it into a computer to damage the machinery – this ploy was very successful.

The ability to write malware code onto USB sticks is not a new phenomenon, and the “USB drop” technique is used by some security assessment companies to test staff awareness. There is even a smartly priced commercially available version of a USB onto which one can load customized code.

What should you do if you find a USB stick and you want to locate the owner?

Unfortunately, the only safe way to view the contents is to use a machine that will not allow the writing of any files to a hard drive. A computer without a hard drive could be booted with a bootable DVD of a Linux distribution. This would allow a person to mount the USB stick to try to find clues to locate the owner.

As you can see, this “safe technique” is far beyond the technical understanding of the average person, and it is best left to a professional.

The best thing to do with a found USB stick is to turn it over to the nearest lost and found.

Our general tendency is towards helping others; however, in the case of a found USB stick, please resist the urge to plug it into a computer to view the contents.

The Federal Trade Commission is warning people about a phishing scam involving a fake Netflix email.

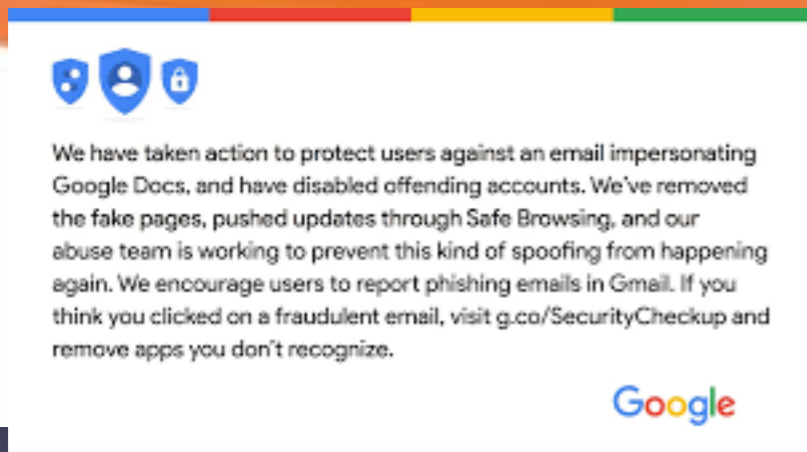

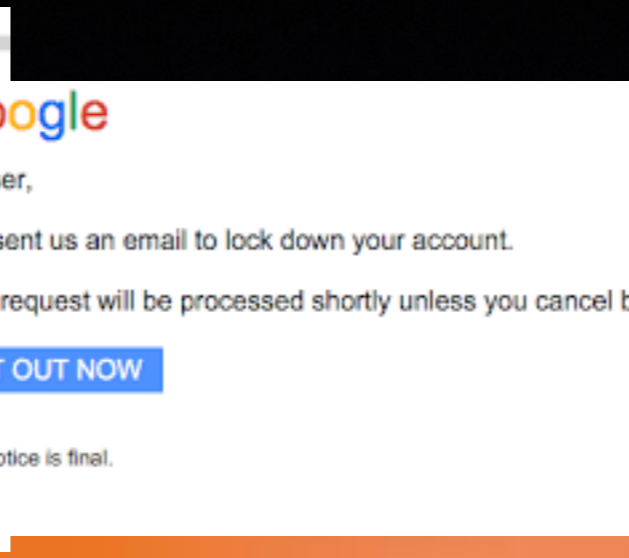

(WFLA) - The Federal Trade Commission is warning people about a phishing scam involving a fake Netflix email.

Phishing is when someone uses fake emails or texts to get you to share valuable personal information like account numbers, Social Security numbers, or your login IDs and passwords. The scammers then use your information to steal your money, your identity, or both.

In this case, scammers created an email that had the Netflix logo on it to make the email look legitimate.

The email claims the user's account is on hold because Netflix is "having some trouble with your current billing information" and invites the user to click on a link to update their payment method.

This is how Facebook's fake-news writers make money

How much money can you bring in by making stuff up and putting it on the Internet? “I make like $10,000 a month from AdSense,” Paul Horner, a prolific, Facebook-focused fake-news writer told us this week. And among a growing group of Macedonian teenagers who see fake-news sites as a way to make easy money from American gullibility, the most successful can make about $5,000 a month, BuzzFeed reported.

The money comes from ads, provided by the self-service ad technology of companies such as Google and Facebook. It is a business model that has changed little over the years, David Carroll, an associate professor of media design at the New School and an expert in advertising tech, told us. “Anybody can make a site and put ads on it,” he said. “They can easily set up a business, create content, and once it is viral, it drives traffic to their site.”
