A Few Helpful Tips

1. Put some cash between your case and phone.
2. Turn off Airplane Mode and turn it on to get a stronger signal close to you.
3. Tap the green button on the phone keypad to dial the last number you called.
4. Tap a "Dark display" in "Display & Brightness" and in turn save battery life.
5. You can stay in a phone call & swipe up to view the home screen & other apps.
 6. You may have difficulty finding a black iPhone with a black case.

Phishing Scams That “Bait” Customers

This PayPal invoice scam almost got me. Here’s how to spot it

By Christopher Elliott

August 4, 2022

There’s a dangerous new PayPal scam making the rounds. This one almost got me — and I cover scams for a living.

It’s a phishing scam that baits customers with a real invoice sent directly from PayPal. That’s right, PayPal is enabling this ruse on its own site.

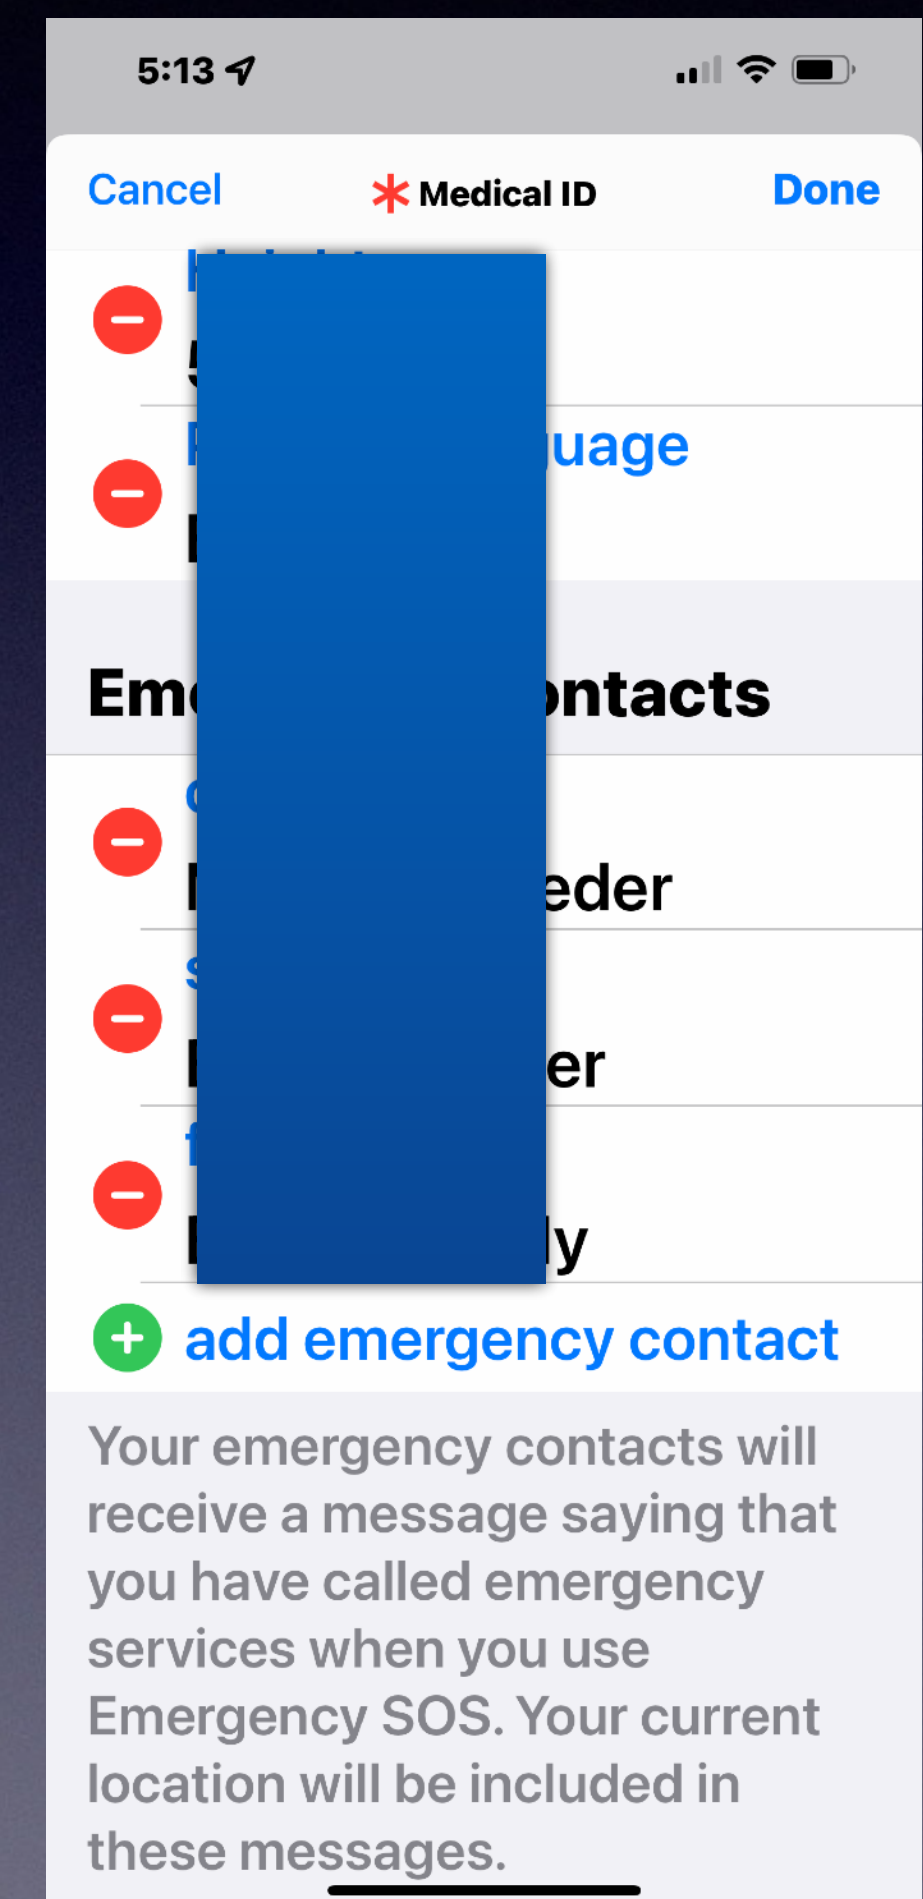

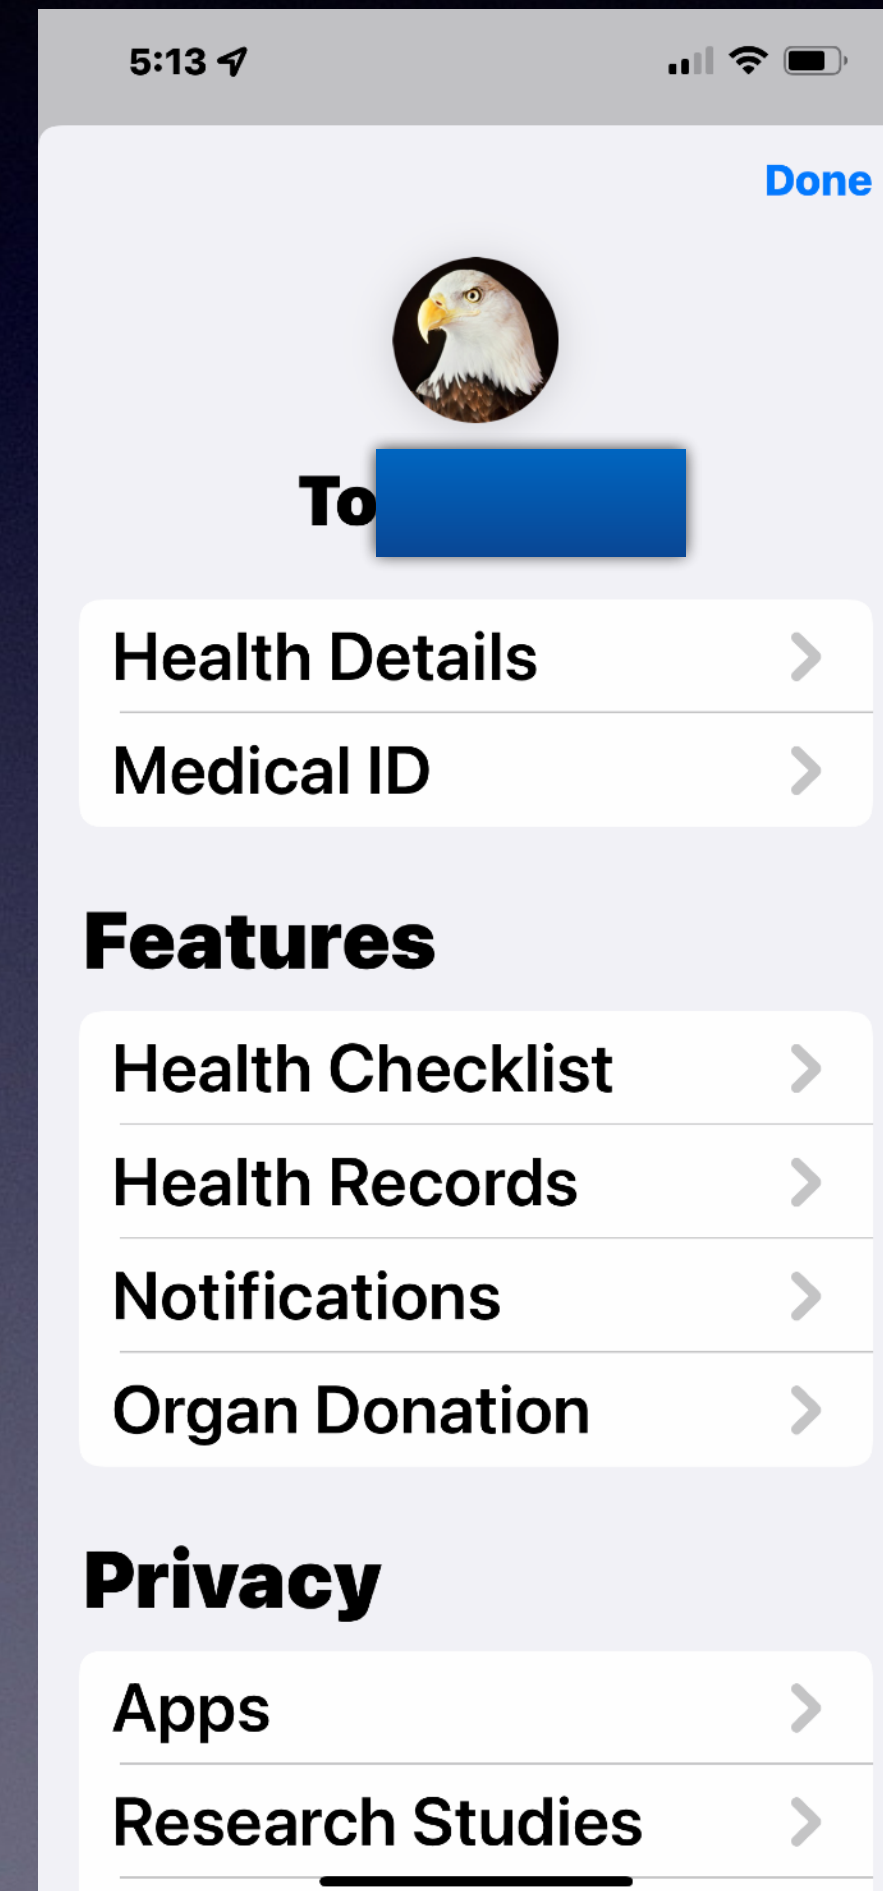

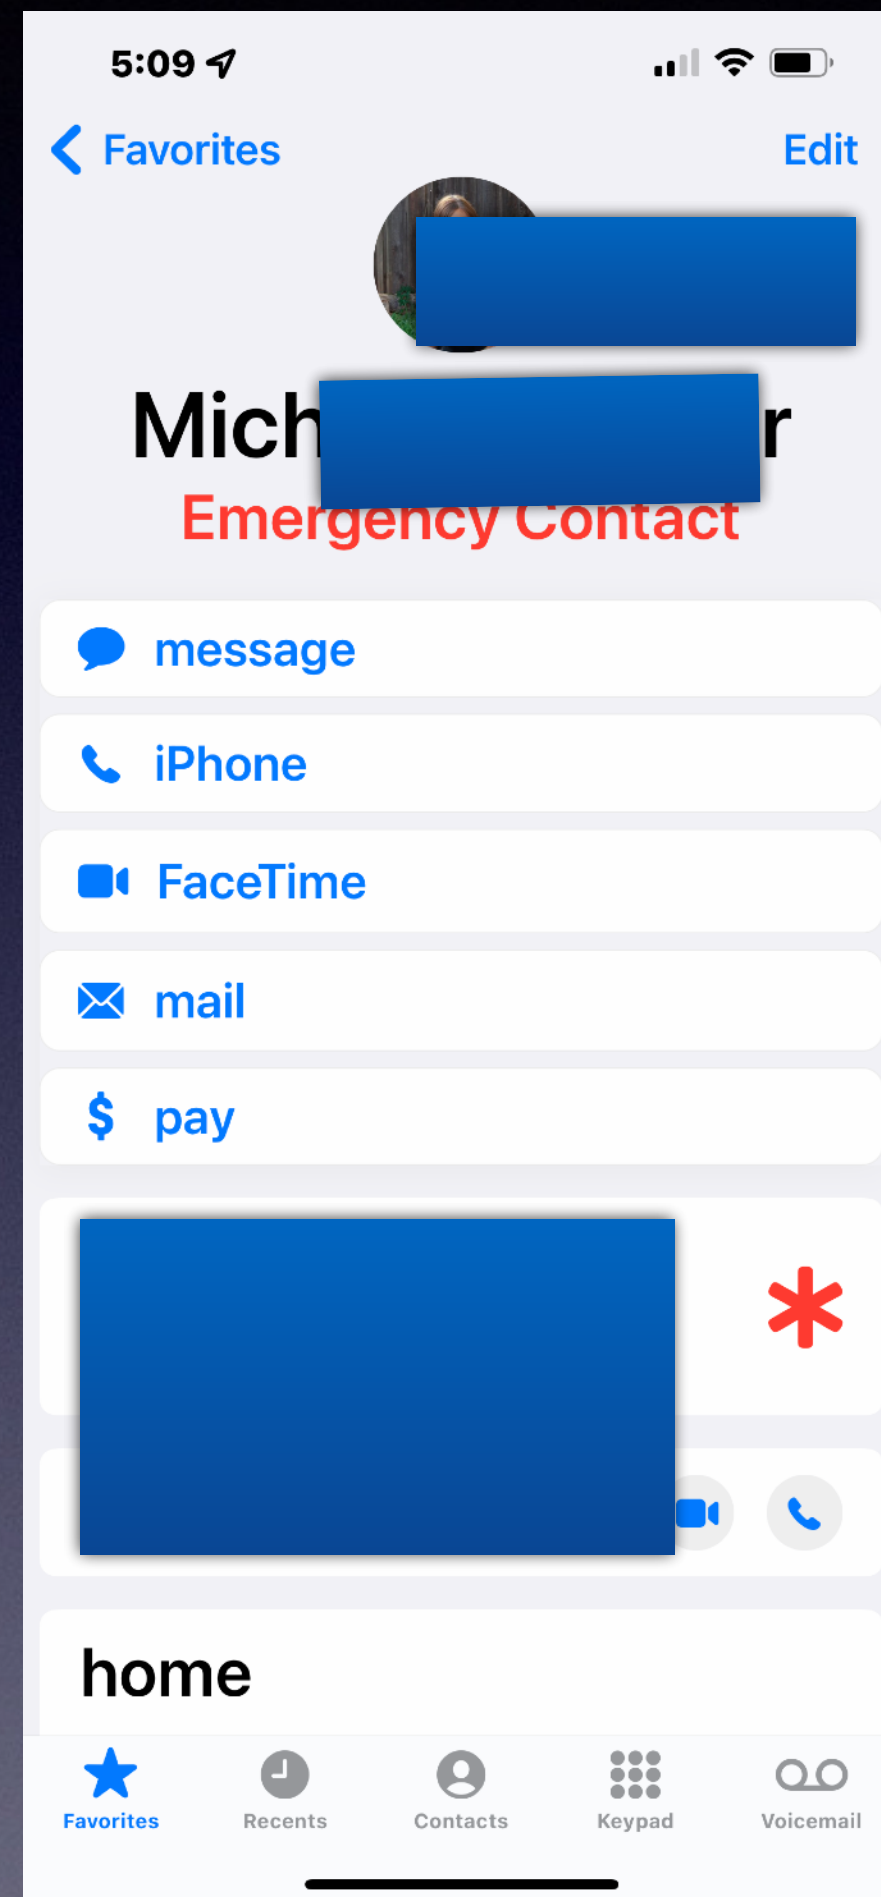

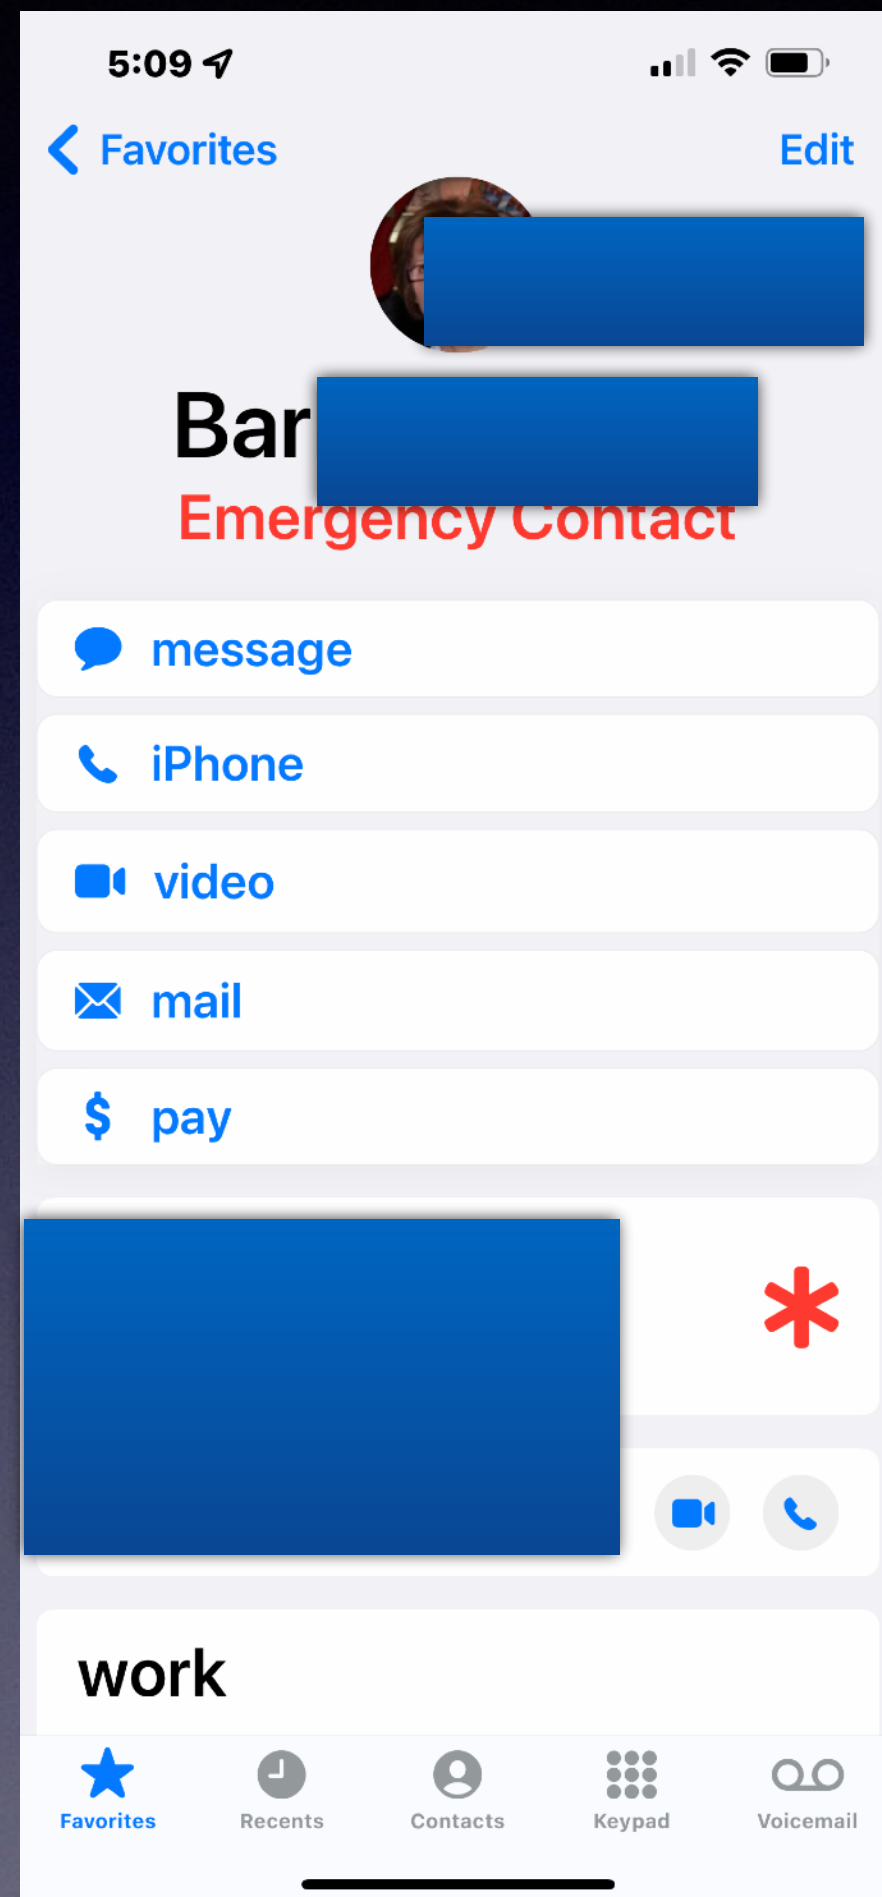

Phishing involves sending a message that pretends to be from a reputable company like PayPal. The email tries to get you to reveal your password. Once you do, the criminals go to work, clearing your PayPal account of money.

PayPal is a playground for scammers. The bad guys love to prey on gullible users by hacking into their accounts and emptying their bank accounts. Just this morning, I heard from a reader who lost more than $20,000 when someone accessed her PayPal account without permission and slowly drained it over several weeks.

When I see a notification from PayPal, I assume it’s a scam.

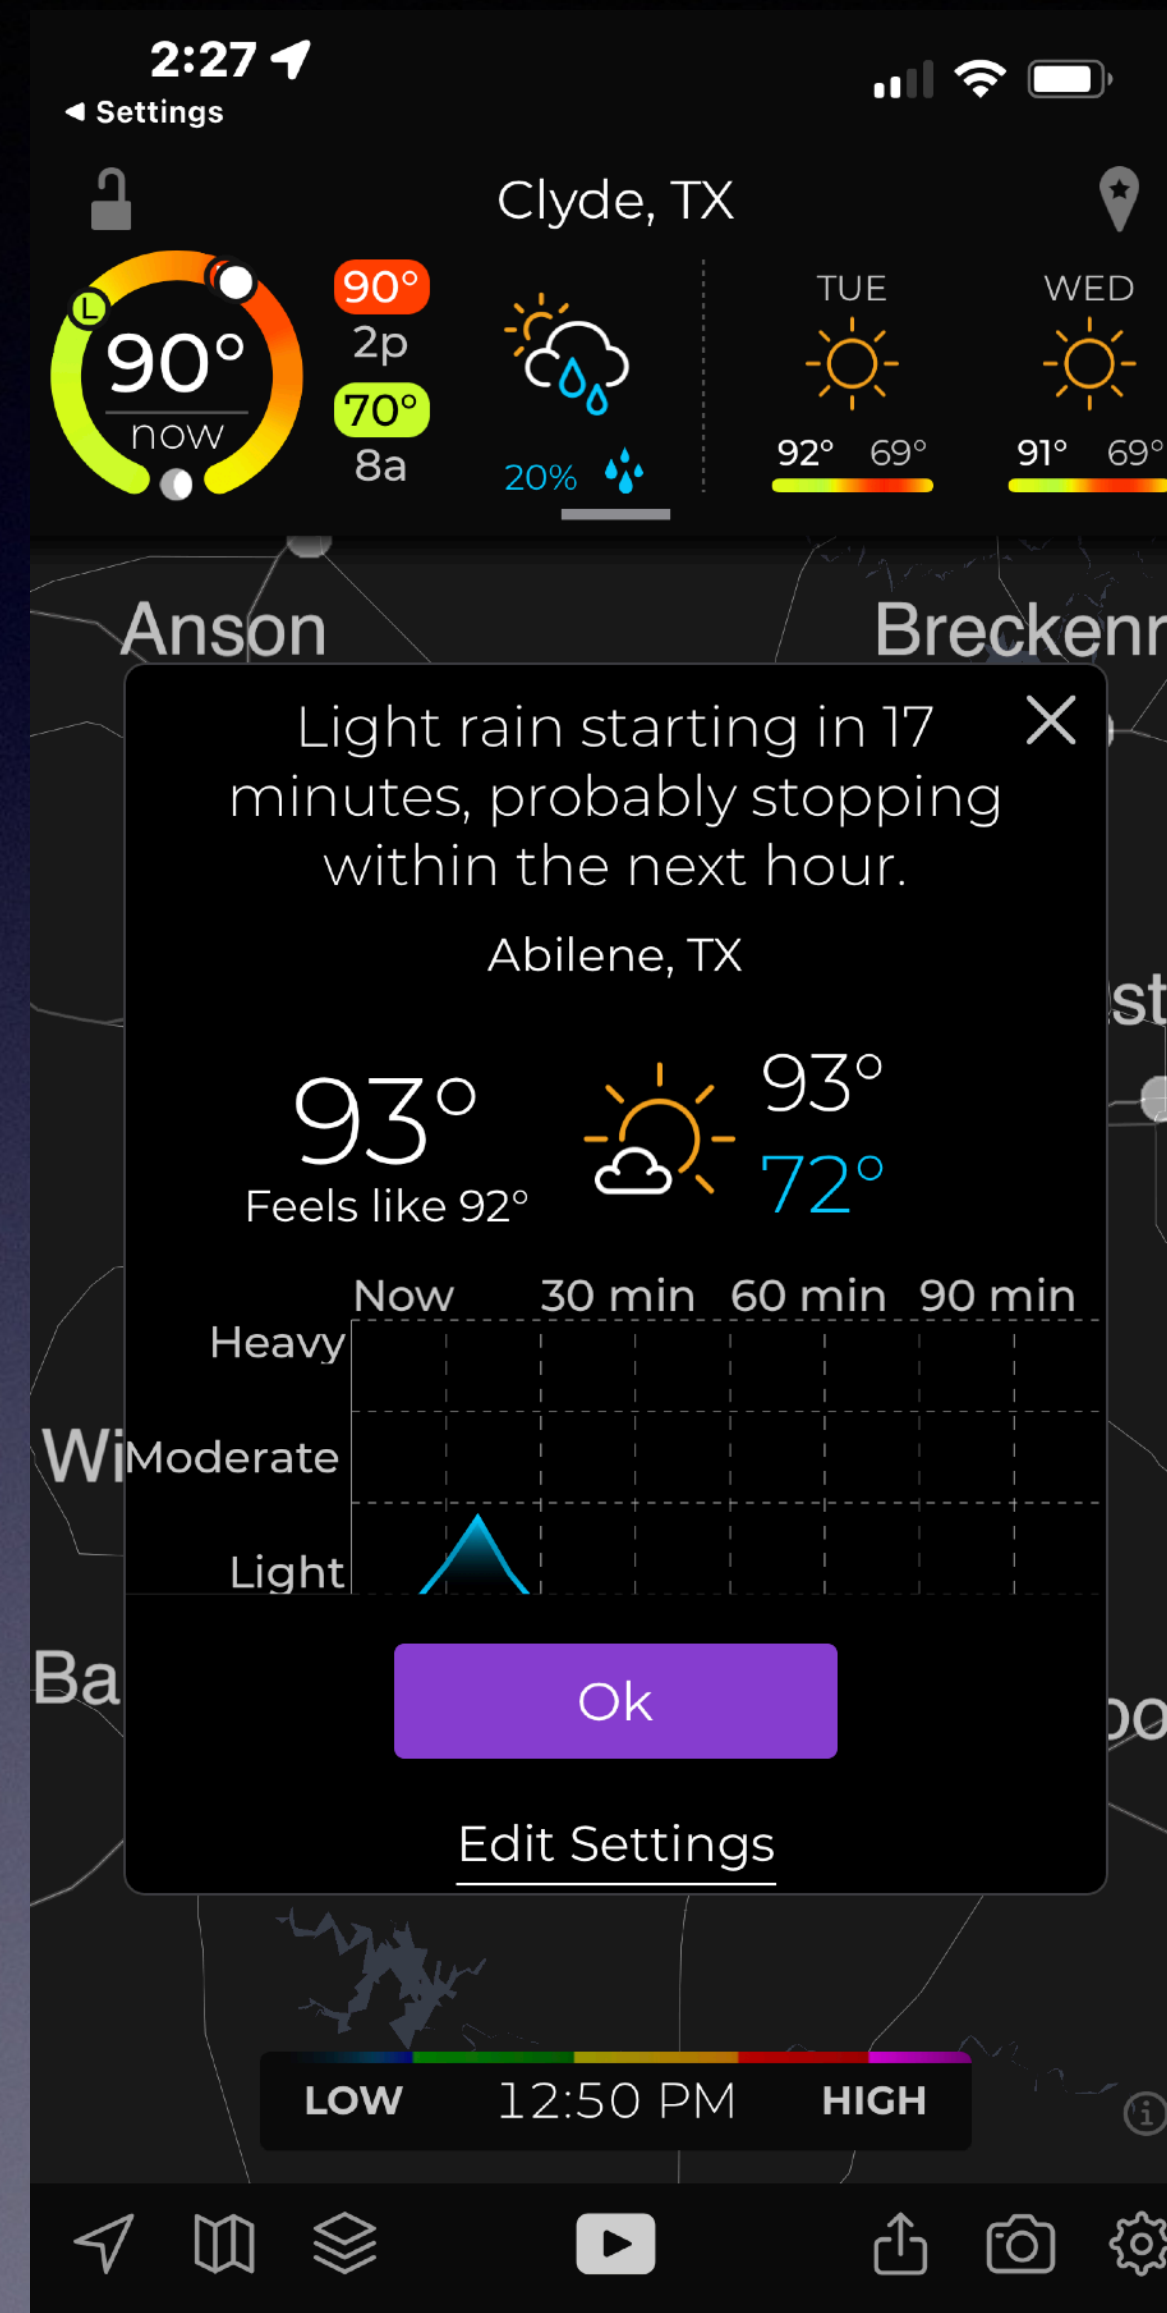

But the email I received earlier this week was different. It was a legitimate message from PayPal with a real invoice. I’ll tell you how I almost fell for it — and how you can avoid becoming a victim of this dangerous new PayPal scam.
